

Webcast 3 - Sustainability, Efficiency and Shovel-Worthy

ABOUT THE SPEAKERS

Martha Jane Murray is an architect with Wilcox Group/ Architects in Little Rock, Arkansas and her work includes healthcare, neighborhood planning, residential and camp structures. Since joining the firm in the spring of 2000 as the director of sustainability, Martha Jane Murray, AIA has undertaken the task of implementing firm-wide sustainable green design strategies. As an architect, Martha Jane's commitment to projects that reflect the triple bottom line led her to become the first LEED Accredited Professional in Arkansas and to be the founding chair of the USGBC-Arkansas Chapter. She was one of five core committee members who organized the national USGBC GreenBuild 2005 response for the Katrina sustainable rebuilding effort.

Since November 2006, Martha Jane has taken a leave of absence from Wilcox to work for the William Jefferson Clinton Foundation's Climate Change Initiative as a policy associate to address global warming with large scale and replicable green building projects. She spent two years working on sustainable rebuilding strategies for New Orleans and coordinated the NOLA 100 low income homeowner rapid rebuild program for CCI, implementing energy efficiency and one of the first engaged carbon offsets with CTG Energetics and Toyota. Beginning in 2009 Martha Jane will be coordinating efforts for CCI with the AR Governor's Office. She is concurrently continuing her pilot project, the Home Energy Assistance Loan (HEAL) program, an energy benefit to employees in her husband's shoe factory in Wynne, AR. Martha Jane has a Bachelor of Arts, Art, Hendrix College, Conway, Arkansas and a Bachelor of Architecture, University of Tennessee. She lives in Hot Springs, Arkansas with her husband and two children.

David Clamage attended the University of Michigan and University of London- School of Economics before establishing Saulsbury Hill Financial. He has served for the Association for Governmental Leasing and Financing; National Business Aircraft Association, Equipment Leasing Association of America, a/k/a Western Association of Equipment Lessors, (former Regional Chairman); and, the Colorado Real Estate Commission as well as the Museum of Contemporary Art – Denver. He has helped create and maintain a fast growing Denver community by serving as a board member (past or current) for the Lower Downtown District and The Downtown Agenda – Denver and the Liquor Commission (Mayoral Appointee 1997 and 1995 and 2004 - 2007 respectively). David Clamage has been a featured speaker in regards to: leasing, project financing and renewable energy financing for the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; the National Electrical Contractors Association; and, The Vietnamese America Friendship Society; The Ministry of Education, Vietnam; The TRANE Company; Honeywell; The Bonneville Power Administration; and, many other commercial and governmental entities.